Loopholes predominately make headlines when they involve large sums of money or reveal absurd gaps in a law that can be exploited. But legal loopholes exist across sectors, and higher education is no exception. And the lack of strong federal guardrails in higher education has made it easier for some institutions to abuse the law and take advantage of both students and taxpayers. Our latest video peels back the layers on what is likely the most well-known loophole in higher education: the 90/10 rule loophole, which has created a dangerous incentive for predatory institutions to target student veterans for their military education benefits.
