Not Conservative Enough?

The Republican base is both more concentrated and more ideologically extreme than the Democratic base—and they think Congressional Republicans are too moderate.

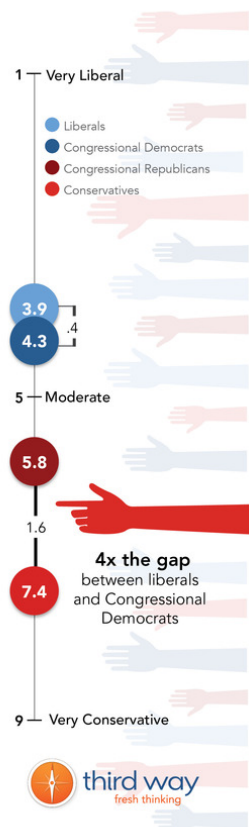

4 in 10 Democrats identify as liberal.
These liberal voters don't see much difference between themselves and Democrats in Congress on an ideological scale—putting Congressional Democrats just right of themselves, as slightly more moderate.

7 in 10 Republicans identify as conservative.
Conservatives place Republicans in Congress a bit to the right of center, but a world away from where they rate their own conservative beliefs.

Nearly 2x more Republicans call themselves conservative than Democrats who identify as liberal.
